Lear's unquenchable fountain of fun was not confined to the limits of limericks His prose stories for children were, and are, enchanting. Do you remember the Four Children who went 'round the world and in the course of their voyage ame to a land "where the uncooked fish complained of the cold and mentioned the difficulty of sleeping on account of the noises made by the arctic bears and the tropical turnspirits?" Do you remember the father country which they visited, "inhabited by countless multitudes of white mice with red eyes, slowly eating custard pudding?" And then the Nonsense Cookery Book with its mirac-ulous recipe for (among other dishes) an amblongus pie, ending "serve up in clean dish and throw the whole out of window;" the Nonsense botany parody-ing with his pen the appearance of plants, and labelling them "manypeeplia up sidownia," and the like.
